Green first met the Clash in 1977. A RIOT OF OUR OWN is his tale of three delirious years of rock 'n' roll madness as confidant and road manager of the Clash, from the early punk days to LONDON CALLING and touring America. Ray Lowry accompanied the band as official 'war artist' on the second American tour and designed the London Calling album cover. Together, in words and pictures, Green and Lowry give the definitive, inside story on one of the most magnificent rock 'n' roll bands ever.

Now seventeen farseeing authors have taken up the challenge of gazing into the future and seeing where America may be the day after tomorrow. From an America where history has become myth and misinformation amid the ruins of a once-vast land...to a place where the only existence for genetic misfits is as slaves to the "Gawders"...to a company intent on cloning the world's species, both extinct and endangered, back to a balanced ecosystem, here are original stories that will have readers thinking about the future, and about how their own actions now could make a difference tomorrow. How to Disappear Completely Vintage EBONY is the flagship magazine of Johnson Publishing. John Robertson:

Super Tramp Oxford
You've been lifting for a few years. When you take your shirt off, do you look like a professional athlete? Do you even look like you work out? Many fitness "experts" defend weights and cardio like they are infallible, but where are the results? Why does almost nobody look even marginally athletic? Fitness may be the most failed human endeavor, and you are about to see how exercise science has missed some obvious principles that when enacted will turn you into the superhuman you always wanted to be. In Weight Lifting is a Waste of Time, Dr. John Jaquish and Henry Alkire explore the science that supports this argument and lay out a superior strength training approach that has been seen to put 20 pounds of muscle on drug-free, experienced lifters (i.e., not beginners) in six months.

Backpacker Lulu.com Slam bam thank you ma'mOuch. That hurt. Slam bang right onto my face. In India, this experience is so common. In fact, Indians who go to the US are bewildered by the practice of holding on to the door for the one behind you. It takes time to get this practice right, and consistently. In the meantime, countless American faces receive the Indian treatment. Holding a door open for another is common courtesy. Kids in the US learn it from an early age. Even the most uneducated American, or one's ardent enemy, will not desist from this practice. But in India, it is bang open the door, go through it like whoosh, and let it slam shut faster than it was opened. Who cares who's coming behind? A 90-year old grandma, a man in a wheelchair, a dog, or India's reigning beauty queen, Aishwarya Rai. And what if they get their get their toes stubbed, fingers jammed, or noses rearranged in the headlong rush to catch the closing door? Aishwarya Rai's legions of fans will go crazy if her face is set right, but what about the rest of us poor mortals. Or dogs. The pity is that most Indians are not even aware of the practice. They blithely go through doors as if sailing into heaven. And heaven help the people behind if the door swings both ways. Groping lifts And what about lifts? Or elevators, as the Yanks call them. In the US, if someone is rushing to catch an elevator, people inside will ensure that the closing door remains open. One has only to press a button or slide one's arm through the vacant space between the two halves of the door for this to occur. A sign of extra politeness is to ask the new entrant what floor they want to get off on and then press the appropriate button. What happens in India? Someone is running to catch a lift. People inside will do their best to keep out the wannabe entrant by pressing the close button. Now one may argue that lifts tends to be crowded in India, but is this really an excuse. Let's say that by chance the person is able to enter the jam-packed lift. Nobody is going to ask her which floor she wants to get off on. Instead, she will have to grope her way through the melee to reach the lift button herself. Her hand will touch hither and thither, countless people will get countless ideas, pity the poor soul if one of those thoughts are enacted into practice. Out in the open, scratching away Now it's not as if Americans are saints in the department of manners, and Indians completely uncouth. But why do Indian men, of all classes, not hesitate to lower their pants and pee in broad daylight? It's true that clean toilets are in desperately short supply all over India, but women have the same needs as men, but they are able to hold their bladders until an appropriate opportunity presents itself. And it could be argued that public toilets for women are even more unhygienic than men, oops, sorry, than those for men. Indian men carry their strange fetish to unload in public to the US as well. A friend of mine was driving on a highway and decided, on a lark, to stop and pee. In the US, spic-and-span rest stops are to be found very frequently on highways, so he could have easily have kept his zipper locked and waited for one. As he tells the tale, right when he was in the middle of the act, a policeman stopped by. My unlucky friend did not even have the time to pull up his pants. He started pouring out one excuse after another, that he had a weak bladder, that he really wasn't causing any harm to anyone, that his urine would serve as fertilizer to the bushes along the highway. The cop laughed but refused to listen and fined my friend two hundred dollars. To add insult to injury, he scolded him for his drop-down behavior and said that while it may be ok in his native land, it was unacceptable in the

US. And what about the groin itch? Itch, itch, itch. Pull, scratch, fiddle. Pull on the scrotum. Scratch the pubes. Fiddle with the willie. Have ants got into your pants?

In Running with the Devil, Robert Walser explores how and why heavy metal works, both musically and socially, and at the same time uses metal to investigate contemporary formations of identity, community, gender, and power.
